

L A M

In their wailing they shall take up a lamentation for thee,
and lament over thee. Ezek. xxvii. 32.

Far less I now lament for one whole world
Of wicked sons destroy'd, than I rejoice
For one man found so perfect and so just,
That God vouchsafes to raise another world
From him. Milton's Par. Lost, b. xi. l. 874.

To LAMENT. v. a. To bewail; to mourn; to bemoan; to sorrow for.

Come, now tow'rd's Chertsey with your holy laud,
And still, as you are weary of this weight,
Rest you, while I lament king Henry's corse. Shakespeare.

The pair of fates praise;
One pity'd, one contemn'd the woful times,
One laugh'd at follies, one lamented crimes. Dryden.

LAMENT. n. f. [lamentum, Latin, from the verb.]
1. Sorrow audibly expressed; lamentation; grief uttered in complaints or cries.

Long ere our approaching heard within
Noise, other than the found of dance, or song!
Torment, and loud lament, and furious rage. Milton.

The loud laments arise,
Of one distress'd, and muffled mingled cries. Dryden.

2. Expression of sorrow.
To add to your laments,
Wherewith you now bedew king Henry's hearth,
I must inform you of a dismal fight. Shakespeare, Henry VI.

LAMENTABLE. adj. [lamentabilis, Latin; lamentable, French, from lament.]

1. To be lamented; causing sorrow.
The lamentable change is from the best;
The worst returns to laughter. Shakespeare, King Lear.

2. Mournful; sorrowful; expressing sorrow.
A lamentable tune is the sweetest music to a woful mind. Sidney.

The viols to their vessels bear the prize,
And hear behind loud groans, and lamentable cries. Dryden.

3. Miserable, in a ludicrous or low sense; pitiful; despicable.
This bishop, to make out the disparity between the heavens and them, flies to this lamentable refuge. Stillingfleet.

LAMENTABLY. adv. [from lamentable.]
1. With expressions or tokens of sorrow; mournfully.
The matter in itself lamentable, lamentably expressed by the old prince, greatly moved the two princes to compassion. Sidney, b. ii.

2. So as to cause sorrow.
Our fortune on the sea is out of breath,
And sinks most lamentably. Shakespeare, Ant. and Cleopatra.

3. Pitifully; despicably.
LAMENTATION. n. f. [lamentatio, Latin.] Expression of sorrow; audible grief.

Be't lawful that I invoke thy ghost,
To hear the lamentations of poor Anne. Shakespeare, R. III.

His sons buried him, and all Israel made great lamentation for him. Mac. ii. 10.

LAMENTER. n. f. [from lament.] He who mourns or laments.
Such a complaint good company must pity, whether they think the lamenter ill or not. Speilator, N. 429.

LAMENTER. n. f. A fish called a sea-cow or manatee, which is near twenty feet long, the head resembling that of a cow, and two short feet, with which it creeps on the shallows and rocks to get food; but has no fins: the flesh is commonly eaten. Bailey.

LAMINA. n. f. [Lat.] Thin plate; one coat laid over another.
LAMINATED. adj. [from lamina.] Plated; used of such bodies whose texture discovers such a disposition as that of plates lying over one another.

From the apposition of different coloured gravel arises, for the most part, the laminated appearance of a stone. Sharp.

To LAMM. v. a. To beat soundly with a cudgel. Dist.

LAMMAS. n. f. [This word is said by Bailey, I know not on what authority, to be derived from a custom, by which the tenants of the archbishop of York were obliged, at the time of masts, on the first of August, to bring a lamb to the altar. In Scotland they are said to wean lambs on this day. It may else be corrupted from lattermath.] The first of August.

In 1578 was that famous lammas day, which buried the reputation of Don John of Austria. Bacon.

LAMP. n. f. [lampe, French; lampas, Latin.]

1. A light made with oil and a wick.
O thievish night,
Why should'st thou, but for some felonious end,
In thy dark lantern thus close up the flues
That nature hung in heaven, and fill'd their lamps
With everlasting oil, to give due light
To the mistle and lonely traveler?
In lamp furnaces I used spirit of wine instead of oil, and with the same flame has melted foliated gold. Boyle.

2. Any kind of light, in poetical language, real or metaphorical.
Thy gentle eyes send forth a quick'ning spirit,
And feed the dying lamp of life within me. Rowe.

Cynthia, fair regent of the night,
O may thy silver lamp from heaven's high bow
Direct my footsteps in the midnight hour. Gay.

LA'NPASS. n. f. [lampas, French.] A lump of flesh, about the bigness of a nut, in the roof of a horse's mouth, which rises above the teeth. Farris's Dict.

LA'MBLACK. n. f. [lamp and black.] It is made by holding a torch under the bottom of a bason, and as it is fired strike it with a feather into some shell, and grind it with gum water. Peachment on Drawing.

LAMPING. adj. [λαμπρῶν.] Shining; sparkling.
Happy lines, on which with starry light
Those lamping eyes will deign sometimes to look. Spenser.

LAMPOON. n. f. [Bailey derives it from lampoon, a drunken song. It imports, let us drink, from the old French lampoon, and was repeated at the end of each couplet at carousals. Trev.] A personal satire; abuse; censure written not to reform but to vex.

They say my talent is satire; if so, it is a fruitful age: they have sown the dragon's teeth themselves, and it is but just they should reap each other in lampoons. Dryden.

Make satire a lampoon. Pope.

To LAMP'ON. v. a. [from the noun.] To abuse with personal satire.

LAMP'ONER. n. f. [from lampoon.] A scribbler of personal satire.

We are naturally displeased with an unknown critick, as the ladies are with a lampooner, because we are bitten in the dark. Dryden's Rn.

The squibs are those who are called libellers, lampooners, and pamphleteers. Tatler, N. 88.

LA'MPREY. n. f. [lamprey, French; lamprey, Dutch.] Many fish much like the eel frequent both the sea and fresh rivers; as, the lamprel, lamprey, and lamperne. Walton.

These rocks are frequented by lamprons, and greater fishes, that devour the bodies of the drowned. Notes on the Odyssey.

LANCE. n. f. [lance, French; lancea, Latin.] A long spear, which, in the heroic ages, seems to have been generally thrown from the hand, as by the Indians at this day. In later times the combatants thrust them against each other on horseback.

He carried his lances which were strong, to give a lanceoly blow. Sidney.

Plate fin with gold,
And the strong lance of justice hurtles breaks:
Arm it in rags, a pigmy's straw doth pierce it.
They shall hold the bow and the lance. Shakespeare, Jer. l. 42.

To LANCE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To pierce; to cut.
In fell motion,
With his prepared sword he charges home
My unprovided body, lanc'd my arm. Shakespeare.

In their cruel worship they lance themselves with knives. Clayville's Scip. c. 16.

Th' infernal minister advanc'd,
Seiz'd the due victim, and with fury lanc'd
Her back, and piercing through her inmost heart,
Drew backward. Dryden's Theod. and Hamira.

2. To open chirurgically; to cut in order to a cure.
We do lance
Diseases in our bodies. Shakespeare, Ant. and Cleopatra.

Fell sorrow's tooth doth never rankle more
Than when it bites, but lanceth not the core. Shakespeare.

That differs as far from our usual feverities, as the lancing of a physician do from the wounds of an adversary. D. of Ph.

Lance the fore,
And cut the head; for till the core is found
The secret vice is fed. Dryden's Georg. l. 691.

The shepherd stands,
And when the lancing knife requires his hands,
Vain help, with idle prayers, from heav'n demands. Dryden.

LA'NCELY. adj. [from lance.] Suitable to a lance. Not in use.

He carried his lances, which were strong, to give a lanceoly blow. Sidney, b. ii.

LANCEPESADE. n. f. [lance pеззате, French.] The officer under the corporal: not now in use among us.

To th' ladies of her arm he flies,
Fraught both with east and western prize,
Which, when he had in vain essay'd,
Arm'd like a dapper lancepessade. Clayville.

LA'NCET. n. f. [lancette, French.] A small pointed surgical instrument.

I gave vent to it by an apertion with a lancet, and discharged white matter. Wifeman's Surgery.

It differeth from a vein, which in an apparent blue runneth along the body, and is dexterously pricked with a lancet, and a red drop. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. iii.

Hippocrates faith, blood-letting should be done with broad lancets.

lancets or swords, in order to make a large orifice: the manner of opening a vein then was by stabbing or pertusion, as in horses. Arbutnot on ancient Coins.

To LANCER. v. a. [lancer, French.] This word is too often written launch: it is only a vocal corruption of lance.] To dart; to cast as a lance; to throw; to let fly.

See whole arm can lance the surer bolt,
And who's the better Jove. Dryden and Lee's Oedipus.

Me, only me, the hand of fortune bore,
Unblest to tread that interdicted shore:
When Jove tremendous in the fable deeps,
Launch'd his red lightning at our scatter'd ships. Pope.

LANCINATION. n. f. [from lancina, Latin.] Tearing; laceration.

This man is freed from servile hands,
Of hope to rise, or fear to fall:
Lord of himself, though not of lands,
And having nothing, yet hath all. Wotton.

5. Nation; people.
These answers in the silent night receiv'd,
The king himself divulg'd, the land believ'd. Dryden.

6. Urine. [plons, Saxon.] As
Probably this was a coarse expression in the cant strain, formerly in common use, but since laid aside and forgotten, which meant the taking away a man's life. For land or lent is an old word for urine, and to stop the common passages and functions of nature is to kill. Hammer.

You are abused, and by some putter on,
That will be damn'd for't; would I knew the villain,
I would land-damn him. Shakespeare, Winter Tale.

To LAND. v. a. [from the noun.] To set on shore.
You shall hear
The legions, new in Gallia, sooner landed
In our not fearing Britain. Shakespeare, Cymbeline.
